

PERSONNEL REACTION BLANK

The Personnel Reaction Blank (PRB) is an assessment of one's work preferences.

The first part you are asked to indicate whether you Like (L) a certain occupation, Dislike it (D) or feel Indifferent (I) towards it. It does not matter whether you have previous experience doing any of the occupations, what the question is asking is whether you think you would like it or whether you think you would dislike it or be indifferent to it.

The second part of the questionnaire asks whether you consider each statement to be True (T) or False (F) of you. You need to complete all of the questions.

It is important to note that we never look at individual answers. We are looking at trends and patterns of how you answered compared to others.

This assessment asks some slightly unusual questions, but the assessment is well validated and we are not interested in looking at your individual responses.

If you are uncertain as to the meaning of the word "hooky" in question 43, it has a meaning similar to the word "wagging" in New Zealand, or taking time off school without the permission of your parents or school authorities.

There is no time limit, however, most people complete it in about 10-15 minutes.
